

Workplace Wayfinders

The early Christians were known as followers of 'the Way' (Acts 9:2). With only the stories of Jesus to guide them, each person needed to discover what it meant to walk the way of Jesus in their context. They saw God at work, they made mistakes, they learned from one another, and they had the apostles as role models.

Current research shows that the early church got it right. If we want to live differently, we need the freedom to make mistakes, the space to tell stories of what God is doing and to learn from one another. We also need role models.

Workplace Wayfinders is a new initiative to support those who are working out how to be Christian in their secular workplace context and who are willing to be known as Christians in their workplace. They will meet about once per month (usually by zoom) to:

- learn about God's purpose for work;
- share their experience and stories of God;
- gain support as they seek to live as Christians;
- pray together;
- be equipped to be known as a Christian in their workplace.

For more information: please email
mmsupport@bristoldiocese.org

Workplace Wayfinders:

Seeking the Way
Being a light
Building the Kingdom...
... in the workplace.

